Camera Raw: Photoshop's key competitor is Adobe Camera Raw (figure 6.1). There is no reason to use the expensive Photoshop program if Camera Raw is the tool you want to use. Photoshop's plug-ins allow you to emulate many of the Camera Raw features. There are also many free programs available that emulate many of Photoshop's features. Managing projects, templates, and brushes The best way to approach working with Photoshop is to take several shots and then process them to get your final image. The best way to manage your finished images is to create a template for processing your images. For example, imagine that you take a picture of your car, then you take several pictures of your kid, and finally, you decide to edit a picture of a friend. Suppose that you want to process all three pictures at once so that you have them all in one place. You can combine the pictures in Photoshop. In this case, it would be very convenient to have a template that contains the information about each of the images in your project. The best way to have a template is to use layers so that you can customize the project and change the settings as you see fit. As you create layers, you have the ability to adjust the photo in subsequent layers using the tools in Photoshop. See Chapter 5 for more on layers. You can easily go back to the previous layer to make a change. When you open a folder of images, Photoshop creates a project file that contains the information about the images. You can open the project file in Photoshop, and then from there, you can move the images and adjust them easily. Figure 6.1: There are many free alternative programs and plug-ins that emulate Camera Raw's key features. Photoshop's template system can be more than useful. For example, the project that you have chosen for the images that you will be processing has a selection of tools and filters that will help you create the final image. To begin creating a template, you need to open a new document in Photoshop and create an empty layer. Then create a new folder and save the template. You can adjust the template to suit your needs. Create the project file and then use the folder option to place the images into the project file. You can create new layers within the template project file, and you can move the layers to the top or bottom of the file. Each layer can have its own settings and adjustments to improve the quality of the image.

Wes Moore, an attorney for the Navajo Nation, addresses members of the United States Congress about the Navajo-Hopi Land Settlement Act. Flanked by tribal leaders and congressional staffers, two U.S. Senators and a U.S. Congressman on Wednesday called for the Navajo Nation and the Hopi Tribe to enter into negotiations to resolve a century-old land dispute. Joseph Smith, the Democrat from Utah who is chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, and a Republican, Republican from Arizona, Doug Lamborn, said the two tribes should commit to "commit to a negotiated settlement to this dispute." "This is an ongoing dispute and it will come to a head sooner or later," said Smith. He said the tribes are right at the point of no return. "I don't think it's going to change on its own," said Smith. "I think it's time for them to enter into negotiations." The Nation and the Hopi Tribe have been at odds for a century over a 50-square-mile parcel of land in northeastern Arizona known as the Gold King Mine area. In 2009, President Barack Obama ordered the Interior Department to settle the land dispute between the two tribes through a negotiated settlement. But the Nation never formally adopted that decision and the dispute went to court. Both tribes are seeking the U.S. Supreme Court to resolve the issue. On Monday, a three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is scheduled to issue a ruling in a lawsuit that was filed by Hopi to stop the Nation from using the Gold King Mine area. Both Smith and Lamborn said they were hopeful that the decision would lead the tribes to open up negotiations. "It's been a long time," said Lamborn. "It's time to move on," he said. "I think the fact that they're here today and the Congress wants to make it possible for them to negotiate with the tribes, that's a step forward." Lamborn also said the tribes could agree to negotiate a settlement of the dispute in the future. "They can get there," he said. Navajo Nation Attorney Wes Moore said the tribes could use the legislative proposal to give
